“ It has almost been 2 months since you left me and coming to terms with you being gone has been the hardest thing I could of ever endured. I know you are guiding and watching over me. I know you are out of pain and you are finally happy. I know you are now with Aunt Carla, Aunt Babe, Your parents, and as of Saturday, you are finally with your brother and I know that was one thought that comforted you when you found out you had cancer. But if we are being honest, I haven't found a thought or something that comforts me knowing that you aren't here. There is nothing. Absolutely nothing helps me to keep my mind away from the fact that you just are NOT here.

I often find myself looking at your facebook to see if something new is there, but there never is. I find myself just hoping that you will use the phone I put in your casket to talk to me. I know, naive but wishful thinking, I guess. I also watch the video of you laughing and listen to the voicemail you left me because I know I will never get a voicemail from you again or wake up to here your life and see your beautiful smile. My heart breaks, but I am hoping you will help me find comfort in your absence... If that is possible.

I love you more, nanny...

Rest in peace, princess.

“ I remember how she would get up at 5 and sweep around Kim and I after she knew we were out all night....I think it was her way of punishing us :)

Stacy Roemer - August 18, 2014 at 05:42 AM

“ *Judy was my great aunt, she was my grandma Vivian sister and my dad Doug aunt. Grandma would take us over too her house too see Carla and Kim, there were always dogs around too play with lol. I know she is in a better place with her daughter and other family members that have passed on, God Bless them all and we all will see you all again one day please keep watch over the rest of us and may God help us deal with the loss of our loved ones. “ Many knew her by Judy, but as for me... I called her nanny. I have too many memories to share them all on here. One of my forever favorite memories with her was how much trouble we always got into when we were together. We were always laughing and cracking jokes. I always had the best times when I was with her. I still have not been able to cope with the fact that my nanny is not here anymore.
